Ever since humans inhabited the earth they have made use of various forms of communication. Generally, the expression of thoughts and feelings has been in the form of oral speech. When there is a language barrier communication is accomplished through sign language in which motions stand for letters, words, and ideas. Tourists, the deaf, and the mute have had to rely on this form of expression. Many of these symbols are very picturesque and exact and can be used internationally; spelling however, can not. Body language transmits ideas and thoughts by certain actions, either intentionally or unintentionally. A nod signifies approval while shaking the head indicates a negative reaction.

Other forms of nonlinguistic language can be found in Braille (a system of raised dots read with the fingertips), signal flags, Morse code and smoke signals. During the teenage years, many young people can at times be difficult to talk to. They often seem to dislike being questioned. They may seem unwilling to talk about their work in school. This is a normal development at this age, though it can be very hard for parents to understand. It is part of becoming independent, of teenagers trying to be adult while they are still growing up. Young people are usually more willing to talk if they believe that questions are asked out of real interest and not because people are trying to check up on them.

Parents should do their best to talk to their son or daughter about school work and future plans but should not push them to talk if they don't want to. Parents should also watch for the danger signs: some young people in trying to be adult may experiment with alcohol or smoking. Parents need to watch for any signs of unusual behavior which may be connected with these and get help if necessary.

Thomas Edison is an example of gifted child who was very badly misunderstood. In fact, his teachers described young Thomas as “dull”. This is why Edison’s mother took him out of school and taught him at home.

The Edison home, by the way, was well stocked with all kinds of books. Nancy Edison tried to expose her son to as many different areas of knowledge as possible, but she especially encouraged him to spend most of his time on whatever really interested him. By his twelfth birthday, he was clearly interested in science, especially chemistry. She made sure he had all the necessary equipment and chemicals to conduct his experiments and he had all the science reference books that he needed.

Edison also gained a great deal from his father, a small but successful businessman. Samuel Edison was characterized by his ability to rescue whatever he could when his business failed so that any failure would become a learning experience. Edison also had this positive attitude. Consequently, after World War I increasing numbers of spectators deserted the theater for the movies. This tendency was sped in the late 1920s as a result of 2 elements. In 1927 sound was added to the previously silent films and thus one of the theater's principal claims to superiority vanished. In 1929 a serious economic depression began.

Since audiences could go to the movies for a small part of what it cost to see a play, theatergoing became a luxury which few could afford, especially as the depression deepened.

The Statue of Liberty is mostly made of copper. Once it was a reddish-brown color, but time and weather have turned it green. The statue wears a loose robe. She raises her right arm high in the air. Her right hand holds a torch – a golden light. Her left hand holds a tablet. It shows the date of the American Declaration of Independence – July Fourth 1776. The statue wears a crown on her head. The crown has seven points. Each of these rays represents the light of freedom. This light shines on seven seas and seven continents. A chain representing oppression lies broken at her feet. Read the passage below carefully and choose the correct answer A, B, C, or D.

Traditional, mental tests have been divided into two types. Achievement tests are designed to measure acquired skill and knowledge, particularly those that have been explicitly taught. The proficiency exams required by some states for high school graduation are achievement tests. Aptitude tests are designed to measure a person's ability to acquire new skills or knowledge. For example, vocational aptitude tests can help you decide whether you would do better as a mechanic or musician. However, all mental tests are in some sense achievement tests because they assume some sort of past learning or experience with certain objects, words, or situations. The difference between achievement and aptitude tests is one of degree and intended use.

Each nation has many good people who take care of others. For example, some high school and college students in the United States often spend many hours as volunteers in hospitals, orphanages or homes for the aged. They read books to the people in these places, or they just visit them, play games with them or listen to their problems.

Other young volunteers go and work in the homes of people who are sick or old. They paint, clean up, or repair their house, do their shopping or mow their lawns. For boys who no longer have fathers there is an organization called Big Brothers. College students and other men take these boys to baseball games or on fishing trips and help them to get to know things that boys usually learn from their fathers.

Each city has a number of clubs where boys and girls can go to play games or learn crafts. Some of these clubs show movies or organize short trips to interest. Most of these clubs use a lot of high school and college students as volunteers because they are young enough to remember the problems of younger boys and girls.
